A Note on Sources

In addition to the various memoirs and other writings cited as sources in our footnotes, we have relied upon the relevant archival holdings for the White House and the various agencies of the U.S. government, held mainly in the John F. Kennedy Library in Boston and the National Archives, Washington, D.C. We have also relied on the less formal holdings of that useful private institute, the National Security Archive, Washington, D.C.

Each footnote appearing for the first time in a chapter is fully cited on first reference. The one exception made was for the many footnotes citing the U.S. Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States 1961–63 (Washington, DC: Government Printing Office). Footnotes that include references to Foreign Relations of the United States are abbreviated as FRUS and include the volume number and page numbers. For FRUS references other than those from 1961 to 1963, the appropriate years are included.
